The page contains a review of a book discussing the topic of spiritualism and science. The reviewer criticizes the author, Wallace, for his treatment of spiritualism and suggests that his arguments are not convincing. The reviewer also notes that Wallace's assertions about the lack of evidence for spiritual phenomena are not as strong as they might seem, given the nature of the phenomena themselves.
asserting it. It is the old thing over and over again, and it could only be tedious to the reader what the author imagines he has proved by merely the table. A great deal he would have found out had he done so having at once put Home on his guard by object­
