

Writer admits ‘belief’ in conservative ideas

Posted: Wednesday, March 27, 2019

OK. I admit it. I believe in a lot of conservative ideas. And by “believe,” I mean the following:

I believe in the Second Amendment. And by “Second Amendment,” I mean the right to own laser-guided nuclear-tipped missiles – just like the Framers envisioned.

I believe in freedom of religion. And by “religion,” I obviously mean Christian – not the fake religions they mention occasionally on those phony, left-leaning news outlets.

I believe quality health care should be available to everyone. And by “available,” I mean if you can afford it, you should have access to the best health care in the world.

I believe in free enterprise. And by “free enterprise,” I mean we should let the market decide – except, of course, when someone in another country can make it cheaper or better, in which case we should slap them with the highest tariffs possible.

I believe everyone should attend public schools. And by “everyone,” I mean those whose parents can’t afford to send them to private schools.

I believe in protecting the environment. And by “protecting,” I mean making sure nothing in nature impedes our inalienable right to make money.

I believe in equality. And by “equality,” I mean not discriminating on who we deny entry into our sovereign nation.

I believe in helping our neighbors who are in need. And by “helping,” I mean doing everything we can as long as it doesn’t impact our own well-being or require any real sacrifice.

I believe the president’s election was a mandate. And by “mandate,” I mean he received nearly 3 million votes less than the other candidate.

Finally, I believe I am solely responsible for my success in life. And by “solely responsible,” I mean against all odds I was still able to overcome the unimaginable disadvantages of being white and privileged.
